UNCLE WIGGILY

THE STORY OF THANKSGIVING.

(BY HOWARD R. GARIS.)

"Oh, joy! Oh, joy! Tomorrow is Thanksgiving! We shall have some jolly times, and plenty of good living!"

This is what Uncle Wiggily heard Curly and Floppy Twistytail, the two piggy boys, singing one day as he hopped along through the woods.

"Hum!" thought the bunny rabbit to himself. "Even though Thanksgiving comes but once a year, bringing with it much good cheer. Those little chaps ought not to think so much about eating. I must speak to them."

But before Uncle Wiggily could do this, he heard Jackie and Peetie Bow Wow, the puppy dog boys, barking to one another about the holiday.

"We're going to have grilled bones, fried bones, stewed bones and soup bones," said Peetie.

"Oh, I'll eat so much as never was!" whined Peetie. "I'm so glad Thanksgiving is almost here."

"Dear me!" whispered Uncle Wiggily. "One would think Thanksgiving was made only to see how much one can eat and be thankful. I suppose that they are not made ill by it. I wonder how I can make these little animal chaps know that Thanksgiving is for something quite different. I must think of a plan."

And Uncle Wiggily did. With the help of Nurse Jane, his muskrat lady housekeeper, he carried it out. The day before Thanksgiving all the animal boys and girls received invitations to come to the bunny's hollow stump bungalow.

"Oh, what a feast there will be! Such cream pies!" mewed Tommy Kat.

"And what lovely papers off tin cans to eat!" bleated Billie Wagtail, the goat. "And paste candy! Oh, yum!"

"And I know he'll have bushels and bushels of candy nuts for us," chattered Billie and Johnnie Bushytail, the squirrels.

So each animal boy and girl was quite excited, waiting for the time to come to go to Uncle Wiggily's Thanksgiving party.

"I hope he gives us a surprise," cackled Arabella the chicken.

And there was a surprise, but not just the kind the boys and girls counted on. For when they rang the bell and Nurse Jane let them into the hollow stump bungalow there were no smells of good cooking. No roast turkey, cranberry sauce, celery, pie, cake and cookies. Uncle Wiggily's bungalow didn't smell at all of good things to eat. The bunny came out into the hall to meet his guests.

"Walk right in to the dining room," he invited.

"Now for the good things!" whispered Sammie Littletail. "Cabbage turnovers and turnip shorcake! Yum! Yum!"

"And I guess chocolate pudding and sour milk custard," grunted Floppy Twistytail, the little pig.

Well, you can imagine how surprised those animal boys and girls were when they reached the dining room and all they saw on the table was just the cloth! Not a thing to eat—not even a plate, knife or fork!

"Sit down, my friends," said Uncle Wiggily. "I have something to say to you!"

With wondering faces the animal children sat down to the empty table. The bunny took his place at the head and said:

"Today is Thanksgiving. We should first of all be thankful that we are alive and that there is a feast in the hall. A skiffing, skuffling sort of a noise, of long, sharp claws scraping over the floor. And there was the sound of sniffing and snuffing and growls."

"Quick, children!" whispered the bunny. "Hide under the table! Some one is coming!"

Under the table ducked all the animal boys and girls. And no sooner were they safely hidden from sight than in stalked the Bad Bushy Bear, the Fuzzy Fox and the Woosie Wolf.

"Oh, wow!" howled the Wolf. "I thought Uncle Wiggily would have a fine Thanksgiving dinner for us. But look! His table is a bare as Mother Hubbard's cupboard! There's no use staying here! He must be eating his Thanksgiving dinner at the home of some of his friends. Come on!" And out stalked the bad animals, hurrying away to look for the bunny.

Uncle Wiggily and the boys and girls came out from under the table, where the bad animals had not seen them.

"As I was saying," began the bunny, "we should be thankful for being alive. If I had had a big dinner today the Fox, Wolf and Bear would have invited themselves, and very likely have eaten us, as well as the meal. So we should be thankful, should we not?"

"Yes! Uncle Wiggily!" chorused the animal boys and girls; but there was a hungry look about them. Then the bunny laughed, the kitchen door opened and in came Nurse Jane and some animal ladies with the nicest Thanksgiving dinner you can imagine, from celery to cranberry sauce.

"I just wanted you to know," said the bunny, as the animal boys and girls began to eat; "I wanted you to know that there are things to be thankful for besides good meals."

"That's right!" cried every one. And then such a feast as there was, not too much, but just enough, and the Fox, Bear and Wolf had to chew dried leaves.

But if the condensed milk doesn't roll down the ironing board when it is trying to slide to first base under the gas stove, the next story will be about Uncle Wiggily's washing.
